RATIONALE
The Art of Observation is a preclinical elective focusing on developing skills for clinical diagnosis through looking at works of art. Through experiences with artwork, students in the course will improve visual literacy skills, which is the ability to observe, analyze, interpret, and make meaning from information presented in the form of an image and relates to both examining patients as well as artwork. The course uses the power of art to promote the analysis and communication necessary in addressing ambiguity in the physical exam and patient interaction.

We will discuss factors influencing what we see, and how we interpret visual information. Other topics include artists with disease, empathy and cultural influences, with their implications for medical practice. Participants will cultivate habits of close observation, inspection, and cognitive reflections to shape his or her early medical career. Students will learn to synthesize observations and one’s own knowledge and experiences as well as an awareness of the collaborative thinking process of the group, a skill vital to successful clinical practice.

The class will engage students in discussions, drawing and writing exercises, lectures, and interactive experiences that will foster communication. This is not an art history class and students need no previous training in art to participate. The course meets in accordance with the schedule at the Dallas Museum of Art, Nasher Sculpture Garden, and UT Southwestern Medical Campus.

OBJECTIVES
- Expand students’ abilities in observation, description, interpretation, and analysis of visual information.
- Gain an awareness and understanding of the conscious and unconscious factors that influence observation and interpretation of visual information along with the implications for decision making.
- Provide opportunities for students to work in teams, similar to teams working in clinical settings; listening, analyzing, and further developing one another’s observations and hypotheses.
- Deepen an awareness of the arts as a means to understand the human condition.
FORMAT
- 7 two-hour sessions THURSDAYS 4-6pm
- Small group discussions and lectures
- Drawing, writing, and journaling activates each week
- Minimum of 20 students, capped at 30
- Classes are held at the Dallas Museum of Art, Nasher Sculpture Garden, The Warehouse, The Crow Collection and UT Southwestern Campus

COURSE STRUCTURE
Each class meets at the designated museum for that date. We will discuss the agenda for that date and work in large and small groups directly with works of art in the galleries to develop visual literacy skills through observation, description, analysis, collaborative interpretations, and presentations of their findings. Each session has a wrap-up discussion for students to provide feedback and discuss how the activity might apply to clinical practice. Sessions will incorporate drawing, photography and writing.
